

I am very concerned about the potential impact expanding the Low Power FM broadcast services will have on one of my family's favorite radio stations, K-LOVE. K-LOVE is one of only a handful of radio stations in my area (Portland, OR) that offer positive, family friendly programming. I know that if my children are listening to K-LOVE they will not be assaulted with vulgar and violent words, but instead will have loving thoughts and great songs to sing along with which will help them as they encounter many challenges throughout their day and week.

As the content of popular culture becomes more violent and hateful, I fear what kind of programming will be presented with the proposal to expand the Low Power FM (LPFM) broadcast, and that it could replace the positive message that K-LOVE provides to this community. I definitely feel that keeping K-LOVE on the airwaves is in the public interest, and I know that my family and I would suffer greatly if we lost this wonderful radio station as a result of the FCC expanding the LPFM.

I strongly urge the FCC to ensure that the good radio programming provided by services such as K-LOVE will not lose their ability to reach my family because they are knocked off the air by a LPFM station.
